$ 59.97 DESCRIPTION (Applicant's abstract): Nucleic acids are recognized and bound by a variety of host cellular proteins and may be a target for development of anti-viral therapeutics. Many studies of the interaction of nucleic acids with the cellular environment have focused on effects of protein binding on the biophysical characteristics of nucleic acids, yet much is unknown about the cellular mechanisms for recognition and removal of foreign nucleic acids. This project will investigate the cellular basis for the removal of nucleic acids, and determine the role of the cell's ability to control foreign nucleic acid levels in maintaining cellular homeostasis. The first specific aim will focus on the interaction of nucleic acids with histones, which has been suggested to be an important determinant of chromosomal stability. The second aim will investigate the involvement of cytoplasmic 5'3' exonucleases, in the removal of internalized oligonucleotides, and the regulation of transcription by foreign DNA present in the nucleus. The third aim will examine the possible role of the lytic granules of activated cytotoxic T lymphocytes in regulating the extent of chromosomal breakage in a virus-specific manner.
